

Highlights

- Independent rodent-to-human directional gene-effect agreement is about 62%
- Shared-publication co-curation inflates naive cross-species agreement to about 89%
- Human-rodent divergence barely exceeds the mouse-rat agreement benchmark
- Molecular endpoint and replication depth, not chemical class, govern transfer
- Protein sequence conservation is not associated with directional transfer